L.A. AREA CHAMBER, LOYOLA MARYMOUNT UNIVERSITY HOST COLLEGE COMPETITION ON INTERNATIONAL BUSINESS

College students compete for $18,000 in prizes, connect with world trade leaders in first-ever World Trade Week college competition

WHAT: World Trade Week International Business University Competition. Hosted by World Trade Week and Loyola Marymount University, the competition is an opportunity for college students to apply their international business knowledge, further fulfilling the mission of this year’s World Trade Week, held last May.

WHEN: Thursday, Oct. 26—Saturday, Oct. 28 (Click here for detailed schedule)

WHERE: Loyola Marymount University, College of Business Administration
1 LMU Drive, Los Angeles, CA. 90045

WHO: College students from Loyola Marymount University, Saint Louis University, University of Southern California, University of South Carolina and Villanova University

International trade panelists include:
Donald Kurtz, City National Bank
Caroline Brown, Comerica Bank
Randolph Muhlestein, Carlsmith Ball LLP
Joseph Cox, Stein Shostak Shostak Pollack & O'Hara, LLP
Maurice Kogon, Center for International Trade Development
Carol Rowen, International Trade Education Programs – ITEP
Charlie Woo, Megatoys

WHY: Globalization is at the center of the country’s economy and L.A. is the trade and logistics capital of the United States. With international trade an integral part of our economy, it’s important that our country’s college students are prepared with the tools necessary to do business globally. The World Trade Week competition allows students to challenge themselves in real-world scenarios about the business of trade.

Four students from each participating college will compete for $18,000 in prize money—$10,000 for first, $5,000 for second and $3,000 for third. Within 48 hours, students will gather data, meet with professionals, form solutions and defend their results.
Professionals from the international business community and government diplomats will participate as panelists and resources.
